
Forum Guidelines

Posted by BobT - 2007/10/10 03:09

This forum is for families of addicts. Anyone visiting this site is invited to share their stories, experience, strength and hope about the disease of addiction. By sharing, you will not only experience some relief but also help others who are in the same situation. No one can survive this disease by isolating and avoiding asking others for help.

The only rules are to refrain from profanity, gossip about what you read here and to avoid criticism. The surest way to push someone away who is reaching out for help is criticize what they have to say.

Thank you for visiting this site and feel free to share what is on your mind. It can be a little intimidating at first but after your first post you will become comfortable and benefit greatly from sharing.

Post edited by: findhelp, at: 2007/10/10 05:27

Re:Forum Guidelines

Posted by sonybalony - 2008/09/01 10:16

Early summer 08 I posted comments about 2 different drug and alcohol facilities my son attended, and last week I noticed they were both pulled. One was a very positive, 5 stars, comment. I would really like to share my comments for other parents and addicts. Where do you now want us to post the favorable with the unfavorable? Or aren't either allowed any more?

Re:Forum Guidelines

Posted by teckikat - 2008/09/03 16:26

I am so sorry your posts disappeared. This forum has evolved much with the energy of just one really special person, the founder of this site. I am sure your posts were accidentally deleted. Please post again. This is the place to share and exchange personal experiences of families and loved ones experiences with addicts and rehab.
